

Bobby Tariq Learning Center Reaches 2000+ Average SAT Score

Right now, juniors are stressing and cramming for the dreadful SAT exam coming up rather soon. The new format of the SAT exam to be released this March doesn't make anything better either, since it is the first time this new format is being tested. This happens to be the case at the start of every year, as these juniors try to get their grades as high as possible before the semester ends, as well as studying day and night for the upcoming SAT and AP exams. Yet somehow, a high number of students from Stuyvesant have scored surprisingly high on these exams in the past few years and gained admission into some of the most elite programs and universities. In fact, it just so happens that a majority of them attend Bobby Tariq Learning Center Corp. in Queens, New York.

The renowned tutorial, specializing in the Regents, SHSAT, and SAT exams opened in 2010 by Columbia University graduate Kukhon (Bobby) Uddin. After privately tutoring students while attending Columbia, he decided to open a learning center dedicated solely for students from grade school to college. In just five years, the center has evolved into a four-story complex in East Elmhurst, Queens, with lessons taught by tutors and students from some of the most prestigious universities.

Over the years, the SAT program has seem to becoming more and more successful in terms of scores. As of 2015, the average SAT score reached an outstanding 2050/2400, with many students receiving offers and scholarships to Columbia, Cornell, UPenn, St. John's, and NYU. Just a few months ago, Sanbir Rahman '16 scored a striking 2330 on the SAT, making him one of the center's most successful students.

"Bobby Tariq Learning Center's rigorous program provided me with the proper resources to score high on the SAT," says Sanbir. "I strongly recommend it to everyone who really wants to go to his or her dream college."

Being just a train ride away from Stuyvesant, the center is easily accessible to students after school. While some teens go off hanging out after class, you can definitely see the motivated and dedicated ones sitting for a practice SAT exam, learning new concepts and tactics, or listening to advice and motivational speeches from the Ivy League graduate.

"Many people don't realize that there's a lot you can do to raise your score, even in just a few weeks," says Bobby. "All you need is the right instructor to not only teach you, but also to guide you and help you think, rather than just solve problems and get them right. And that's exactly what we strive to do."

BTLC offers extensive SAT/SAT II/Regents/AP prep and college application and essay help to students so they can work to their highest potentials and go to the schools of their dreams. Visit the center's website at bobbytariq.com or give a call to learn how you can enroll and do the same.
